CRAFTING AN ADVERSARY

One of the most glaring difficulties for long-term campaigns in the One Ring is adversary variety. This guide serves as a comprehensive source for Loremasters to create new adversaries in-line with the material provided in official sources. Explanations, adversary stat block elements, and creation tables are provided in this guide. The creation tables were made by analyzing the attributes of each adversary provided in the official materials to find trends in how enemies of various types are created. No adversary found within official materials is replicated in this guide and only a general overview of adversary creation is provided herein.

1 ATTRIBUTE LEVEL

Attribute Level refers to an adversary's level of difficulty. Adversary Attribute Levels range from 1-12. The system generally follows ranges of Attribute Levels for particular types of adversaries. Orcs range from feeble goblins to imposing Mordor orcs. Their range of attribute levels from 2-8 reflects that diversity. On the other hand, trolls come in sizes ranging from large to massive. Their relative consistency in strength is reflected by their 6-10 range.

Mechanically, Attribute Levels are tied to determining an adversary's capabilities. A level 6 undead usually has 24 Endurance while a level 6 troll has 50 endurance. This disparity in endurance accounts for the physical differences between the types of adversaries. However, a level 6 undead has more potent Fell Abilities than a level 6 troll. Overall, the two level six adversaries present roughly equal challenges in different forms.

When crafting adversaries, be aware of what kind of being the adversary is. Elves should always have a high Attribute Level unless some ill afflicts them to weaken what is generally a highly-competent race of warriors. If you want to create a high Attribute Level goblin, be intentional why such a deadly opponent comes in such a small form. The ranges of Attribute Levels should not be viewed as limitations for a Loremaster's imagination. Instead, view the ranges for each type of enemy as what is expected. Crafting an adversary outside the range should be quite the unique enemy, mechanically and in presentation.

2 ENDURANCE

Endurance refers to the amount of damage an enemy can take before it is defeated. Endurance can range as widely as 4 to 130 and is split between humanoid and non-humanoid correlations with an adversary's Attribute Level. For humanoid creatures, they typically have 4 Endurance for every 1 Attribute Level. Deviations from this correlation are saved for named enemies and other unique encounters. Non-humanoid creatures vary widely in their endurance score due to the sheer diversity of this category. Two Level 4 creatures could have 12 or 30 Endurance.

When crafting adversaries, be careful determining how much Endurance you should give an adversary. This stat should be the one you align closest to the creation tables. It can be tempting to give a higher endurance score because that intuitively makes sense as an easy way to make an adversary more difficult. However, merely increasing the endurance of a foe does not always lead to a more engaging encounter. If you are creating an adversary that will form the members of a group, do not give them an endurance score that will make the endless horde unkillable. Also, do not deprive a leader adversary enough endurance to be able to trigger its Fell Abilities that will make the encounter memorable. Endurance is a powerful stat. Apply it carefully.

Might determines the amount of attacks that an adversary can make before its turn in combat is over. Might is also equal to the amount of wounds a monster can take before being defeated and the amount of Hate or Resolve that an adversary can spend per round. Therefore, Might must be carefully considered to ensure that an adversary fulfills its role within an encounter. If an adversary is a singular entity or leader of a group, then it should have more than 1 might to allow it fight the player-heroes effectively. If an adversary is to appear as a group of multiple entities, then its Might should likely be 1.

Imagine a party of 4 player-heroes encountering a Marsh Troll. The 4 player-heroes have the equivalent of 4 Might because they can attack once per round. The Marsh Troll has 2 Might. Because the Marsh Troll has 80 Endurance, it will be able to fight the party for multiple rounds. The troll's 2 Might allows it to attack multiple player-heroes a round. This provides an encounter which is challenging to the players but fair to overcome. On the other hand, if the 4 player-heroes encounter a group of four Gundabad Goblins with 2 Might each, the disparity becomes apparent. The player-heroes 4 might equivalent is outpaced by the goblins' 8 combined might. In this encounter, the player-heroes will never be able to perform as many attacks as this group of goblins. Keep this Might-math in mind as you determine how much Might any adversary should have. It is not wrong to have the combined Might of the enemy outnumber that of the player-heroes, but the larger the difference will scale the difficulty of the encounter drastically.

4 RESOLVE AND HATE

Resolve and Hate refer to the same stat, but are used for good-aligned and evil-aligned adversaries respectively. For the rest of this sub-section, I will refer to the stat as Hate because most adversaries in any campaign will be evil-aligned. Hate allows adversaries to active certain Fell Abilities and add a 1d6 to their attack or protection roll. It is important for adversaries to maintain their Hate because they become weary once they have exhausted all their Hate.

When crafting an adversary, Hate equals the Attribute Level of the adversary. This is a universal rule. The rule should not be deviated from because the Attribute Level to Hate correlation is essential to maintaining the appropriate difficulty of the adversary. A high Attribute Level adversary is challenging because it is able to tap into a deep well of Hate points to boost its attacks and to activate its Fell Abilities.

5 PARRY

Parry reflects an adversary's ability to ward off an attack. Mechanically, Parry adds to the TN Strength score a player-hero needs to reach to be able to strike the adversary. Unlike Endurance and Hate, Parry does not correlate to an adversary's Attribute Level. Instead, Parry is tied primarily to an adversary's equipment. Adversaries that fight with weapons are much more likely to have a parry score whereas adversaries that are creatures rarely have a Parry score. As an example, a level 8 plant monster has no Parry score while a level 4 human warrior has a Parry score of 2.

Mechanically, Parry provides a potent longevity modifier to adversaries. Especially for low level player-heroes, the difference between consistently meeting or exceeding a TN Strength score of 15 and 17 is staggering. It is important to be careful when applying a Parry score. If your adversary is low Endurance, a Parry modifier of +1 may greatly increase their chance of survival before they are dispatched in one hit. However, if your adversary has high Endurance, a Parry modifier of +3 may make them nigh unkillable.

Armour refers to the ability of an adversary to withstand the piercing attacks of the player-heroes. Mechanically, every armour point adds 1d6 to the protection role an adversary makes when a piercing blow lands. Therefore, armour allows enemies to withstand what would otherwise be a quick end. Like parry, armour does not correlate with an adversary's attribute level, but its equipment or natural resistance. There are some correlations to armour within certain types of adversaries. The correlation will be apparent in the following tables. It is important to consider the type of adversary that is given certain armour scores. A piercing blow that results in an instant kill gives player-heroes a moment of quickly evening the numbers between their party and their foes. However, you may want to give some adversaries a greater chance of surviving a piercing blow to distinguish them from fodder adversaries.

7 COMBAT PROFICIENCIES

Combat Proficiencies are the weapon attacks available to adversaries. If the adversary is a creature, its weapon proficiencies come in the form of claws, fangs, or other similar body parts. Most adversaries have two Combat Proficiencies with one being higher trained than the other. Combat Proficiencies are divided in the number of d6 to roll, the weapon's damage rating, and the weapon's injury rating. A list of all the different types of weapons is included in this guide. When referencing the creation tables, look at the weapon list for inspiration as to what weapons that the adversary would be equipped with. Remember, the weapons list should be used as a source of inspiration.

8 FELL ABILITIES

Fell abilities refer to the special effects, actions, and attacks that an adversary may activate during a round of combat. Many Fell Abilities require the adversary to spend hate to activate. There is no clear correlation between an adversary's Attribute Level and the amount or potency of their Fell Abilities. Therefore, Fell Abilities tables should be seen as suggested guides and not hard rules to follow. There are still some general trends in Fell Abilities to consider when crafting an adversary.

Fell Abilities can be broken up into attack, weakness, and buffing categories. Attack Fell Abilities are ones that deal damage or shadow to the player-heroes when activated. Damage inducing Fell abilities usually are caused by the adversary's dangerous nature. Shadow inducing attacks are primarily caused by spells or the dreadful nature of the adversary. Weakness Fell Abilities are ones that make the adversary particularly vulnerable to a source of damage or ones that allow the player-heroes to weaken the adversary through a skill roll. A buffing Fell Ability allows an adversary to give allies additional hate, reach otherwise unreachable opponents, or another advantage. These abilities are usually given to an adversary due to their position of authority or their skill.

When crafting an adversary, ask yourself what role the adversary is filling. If the adversary is a leader of a group, then their Fell Abilities should reflect their responsibilities. On the other hand, a warrior's Fell Abilities should be close combat focused.

ORCS

Orcs are the preeminent servants of the Dark Lord. Their kind fills the ranks of his armies and form the backbone of his efforts throughout Middle Earth. Orcs form tribes in safe places such as Mordor, Gundabad, Moria, and other strongholds of evil. Consider what place the orcs you create hail from as their home informs their Fell Abilities, equipment, and tactics.

Equipment

Orcs take into battle a wide variety of arms and armor. The armor of orcs are often foully made leather, chainmail, and plate armor. Orc weapons are widely varied including bows, swords, axes, hammers, staffs, spears, daggers, and any other plundered weapon they can lay their hands on. Really, the limitation of orc equipment is what the adversaries can craft themselves or loot from the surrounding People of the West.

Fell Abilities

All orcs share the Fell Ability Hate Sunlight. Additionally, all orcs may be given the Fell Ability Hatred for any particular folk that inspire the orc's animosity. These core Fell Abilities generally add flavor to orc adversaries and do not form an integral mechanic for these foes.

When choosing what fell abilities to give an orc or goblin, think about what role the adversary fills. A warrior will have close-combat focused abilities. A sorcerer will have access to Dreadful Spells unlike the vast majority of orcs. Those who lead orc bands will need to have Fell Abilities that distribute Hate to their underlings.

TROLLS

Trolls are an imposing enemy for any fellowship to encounter during their journey through Middle Earth. Due to the inherent danger of the beasts, they are a frequent foe in the Dark Lord's forces. Trolls adapt to the environment around them and can be found in caves, snowlands, hills, mountains, swamps, and rivers, among other places. The place where a troll lives is the main distinction in determining what kind of troll you are encountering. Therefore, trolls of the of one kind should share similar characteristics.

Equipment

Trolls usually carry simple weapons and no armor. Trolls derive their armor rating from their natural hide. However, trolls armed by the forces of the Dark Lord may be given armor to further enhance their defensive capabilities. The weapons that trolls wield are often blunt objects: clubs, mauls, maces, and hammers. The fists of a troll can also serve as a potent weapon when the creatures are found unarmed. While trolls can wield other large weapons, their intended use in battle is usually the battering ram of the advancing horde of adversaries.

Fell Abilities

All Trolls share the fell abilities Hideous Toughness and Dull Witted. Hideous toughness allows trolls to endure large amounts of endurance damage while imposing the requirement of the player-heroes scoring a peircing blow. Additionally, Dull Witted allows non-combat proficient player-heroes the ability to drain their Hate through using Riddle. This weakness allows trolls to become weary, making their armor rolls less likely to surpass the injury rating of an attacking player-hero.

Another feature of trolls that is not covered by the official materials through a Fell Ability is that trolls turn to stone when exposed to sunlight. Should you wish to make this a part of a troll's stat block, you could use an optional core Fell Ability Turn to Stone. This lessens the cognitive load on the Loremaster while they run troll adversaries. When creating an Olog-hai, a troll of Mordor, one should remember that such trolls can withstand the rays of the sun without turning to stone.

Also, when making trolls of environments outside of those covered in the official materials, think of additional core Fell Abilities to make those types of trolls unique. Trolls adapt to their environment and would likely share an additional core Fell Ability to reflect their adaptation to their surroundings. An example might be that swamp trolls can use Hate to swim in the water of the swamp, providing players ill-favor making any attack rolls against the troll.

UNDEAD

Undead are called forth from the realm of wraiths to haunt the lands of Middle Earth once more. The reason for their undeath can be an unresolved personal tragedy, the meddling of dark powers, or the words of a broken oath. Therefore, some undead are servants of the Dark Lord, while others haunt Middle Earth for entirely different reasons.

EQUIPMENT

The undead are often armed with only what was buried with them. Should they be the forgotten nobility of Arnor, then they may wear chipped armor and wield rusted arms. However, if the undead is reanimated outside of a noble burial, they likely wield only their claws, or other natural weapons imbued with the foul powers that have awoken them. Not all undead are humanoid, so they may have natural features that are particularly dangerous.

FELL ABILITIES

All undead share the Fell Abilities Deathless, Heartless, and Thing of Terror. Deathless makes undead extremely hard to kill because they are able to cancel wounds and require a successful piercing blow to kill. Heartless ensures that undead are able to maintain their Hate to spend on Fell Abilities and Thing of Terror severely threatens the player-heroes ability to spend hope.

Undead rely on their Fell Abilities to inflict damage on the player-heroes and to increase their survivability. Take those two principles into account when creating undead. Unlike other adversaries, undead maintain low Endurance until the higher Attribute Levels.

Humans inhabit the far reaches of Middle Earth and all the lands inbetween. Men of the West find themselves beset on all side while the men of Eriador toil in the ruins of fallen kingdoms.

Because of the sheer diversity of humanity, men come in all shapes, forms, and capabilities. Therefore, fellowship may cross blades with those only resolved to follow a different path than the player-heroes and men that harbor hate for that which is good in the world.

Equipment

Men are armed with a variety of weapons. Due to their ubiquitous inhabitation across Middle Earth, men wield the greatest variety of arms and armor. Cultural variation among men might make those who hail from Harad wield scimitars and wear chainmail while the Horse Lords of Rohan carry horsemen axes and wear scaled armour.

Fell Abilities

Humans share no core Fell Abilities because every person is unique. Accordingly, each human adversary should be approached with that guiding principle in mind. Humans are so varied that the range of Fell Abilities is equally so. When determining which Fell Abilities to assign to a human adversary, think about the role that the adversary fills. Like orcs, humans can be close combatants, leaders, sorcerers, or ranged combatants. Each type of human adversary requires different Fell Abilities to compliment their equipment.

DWARVES AND ELVES

Dwarves and elves are the long-lived of Middle Earth. No matter if their lives span hundreds or thousands of years, dwarves and elves serve as a potent force against the power of the Dark Lord. Where a spare few among their races may fall under his direct control through corruption or subterfuge, player-heroes will likely only cross blades with elves and dwarves resolved to pursue a path in contradiction to the fellowship's own.

EQUIPMENT

Dwarves and elves wield very different weapons. However, they are alike in that they use the arms and armour that their people forge. This makes the equipment that they bring into battle unique, but uniform among their culture.

Dwarves favour mattocks, axes, hammers, and other tools as weapons. Their small stature prevents them from using great weapons. Their armour is strong and usually in the form of plate and other sturdy metal armour.

Elves prefer to carry refined weapons such as swords, spears, and bows. Their sleek weapons are matched by the quality of their eleven mail and other armour that they defend themselves with.

FELL ABILITIES

Elves and dwarves share no core Fell Abilities. The official materials contain very few adversaries that are dwarf or elf. This is because the player-heroes are often in alliance with the notable dwarves and elves in Middle Earth during this time.

When considering what Fell Abilities to give elves and dwarves, you should be highly imaginative to supplement the rather limited options presented in the official materials. One thing to consider is that most adversaries from these races will have a resolve score and not a hate score. Because killing resolve foes incurs shadow points for being a misdeed, you should contemplate if the adversaries should contain a Fell Ability like Wavering, to provide a mechanical way to get the adversaries to back down.

CREATURES

Creatures from the lowly wolf to the mighty fallen Miar fill the adventures of player-heroes. Their wide variety makes them hard to describe and forces many adversaries into this broad category. Any adversary type not covered in another table should be created using this table.

EQUIPMENT

Creature usually are wild animals and twisted creations of the Dark Lord. Therefore, they rarely carry weapons or armour and rely upon their natural capabilities. Their weapons are fangs, claw, tails, and foul sorcery. Thier armour is hide, scales, bones, and leathery skin.

FELL ABILITIES

Creatures have no core Fell Abilities due to their sheer variety. Fell Abilities are the core to making creatures feel unique when encountered by the player-heroes. Feel at liberty to be creative when creating creatures. When the players do not know they are facing, the creature is truly able to become an imposing threat.

FELL ABILITIES LIST

ll Fell Abilities are listed in alphabetical order. Character-specific wording has been changed to make the text generalizable for inserting the Fell Ability into a new adversary. Dreadful spells is the catch-all term for magic used by adversaries. Multiple spells have the same name, but different effects.

A Mind of Metal and Wheels. (Adversary) is not affected by the Intimidate Foes combat task.

Aquatic. All rolls are Ill- favoured while on land.

Battle-hardened. Spend 1 Resolve point to gain (2d) on a Protection roll.

Beloved Flesh. Each time (Adversary) is Wounded, they also loses 1 Hate. In addition, when ever (Adversary) loses or spends Hate, increase that loss or expenditure by 1 for each Wound they have.

Black Breath. At the start of the first round of the battle, all Player-heroes near one or more Ring wraiths gain 4 Shadow points (Dread). The VALOUR roll is Ill-favoured while in darkness. Those who fail their Shadow test fall unconscious for the rest of the fight. A successful HEALING roll from another Player-hero (who must spend their main action to do so) revives the target, who is daunted and cannot spend Hope for the rest of the fight. If the Shadow test failed with an , then the Player-hero has been stricken by the Black Shadow.

Bodiless. (Adversary) is immune to Endurance loss and Wounds from all sources of injury except magical weapons, and can spend 1 Hate to cancel a Wound from such weapons. When an attack inflicts damage to (Adversary) that would cause him to go to zero Endurance, it causes a Piercing Blow instead. Then, if (Adversary) is still alive, their Endurance score is set back at its maximum rating. This ability is completely ineffective against Player-heroes wielding a magical weapon enchanted with spells for the Bane of the Undead.

Breath of Smoke. (Adversary)'s breath is foul and hot. Spend 1 Hate to cause a Moderate Endurance loss from fire to all Player-heroes in a close combat stance. All targets must then make a VALOUR roll: those who fail can only choose Defensive stance as a close combat stance in the following round.

Combat Sorcerer. (Adversary) can cast their Dreadful Spells in place of their attack. If they do so, they can cast the spell without expending Hate.

Craven. When affected by the Intimidate Foe combat task, the creature also loses 1 Resolve.

Darker than the Darkness. Spend 1 Hate to summon a supernatural darkness. Player-heroes in close combat lose (2d) on their first attack against the creature, while ranged attacks lose (2d) for the whole fight.

Deadly Voice. Once per round, spend 1 Hate to make all Player-heroes in sight gain 2 Shadow points (Dread). The VALOUR roll is Ill-favoured while in darkness. Those who fail their Shadow test or are Miserable are daunted and cannot spend Hope for the rest of the fight. Those who fail their Shadow test and are Miserable suffer the same effects as failing the Shadow test against the Black Breath.

Deadly Wound. Wounded targets make an Ill- favoured Feat die roll to determine the severity of their injury.

Deathless. Spend 1 Hate to cancel a Wound. When an attack inflicts damage to the creature that would cause it to go to zero Endurance, spend 1 Hate to bring the creatures back to full Endurance instead. This ability is ineffective against Player- heroes wield ing a magical weapon enchanted with spells for the Bane of the Undead.

Demon of Might. The (Adversary) is immune to Endurance loss and Wounds from all sources of injury except magical weapons, and can spend 1 Hate to cancel a Wound from such weapons (unless they have been wrought for the Bane of the Enemy itself). When an attack inflicts damage to the (Adversary) that would cause it to go to zero Endurance, it causes a Piercing Blow instead. Then, if the (Adversary) is still alive, its Endurance score is set back at half its maximum rating.

Denizen of the Dark. All attack rolls are Favoured while in darkness.

Devilry of Saruman. Once per round, spend 1 Hate to cause a grievous Endurance loss from fire to one Player-hero engaged with (Adversary), and a severe Endurance loss from fire to all other Player-heroes either in a Close Combat stance or Rearward stance (Lore master's choice). Targets who lose at least 1 Endurance are also set on fire, suffering a moderate Endurance loss at the end of each combat round, unless they put out the fire as their main action for the round.

Disappear. (Adversary) can spend 1 Hate to turn invisible until they attack. While invisible, AWARENESS, SCAN, and attack rolls against her lose (2d), while (Adversary)'s attack rolls gain (2d) against Player-heroes who cannot see (Adversary). A Player-hero who obtains a Magical success on an AWARENESS or SCAN roll can see (Adversary) normally and ignores all penalties for the rest of the fight.

Dreadful Spells. Spend 1 Hate to cause a thick mist to rise from their lake, shielding them and other Trolls from the sun and making all attacks made inside the mist Ill-favoured for one combat round.

Dreadful Spells. Spend 1 Hate to make one Player-hero gain 3 Shadow points (Sorcery). Targets who fail their Shadow test or who are Miserable fall unconscious and may be roused only with a SONG roll. Otherwise, they wake up after one hour.

Dreadful Spells. Spend 1 Hate to make one Player-hero gain 3 Shadow points (Sorcery). Targets who fail their Shadow Test or who are Miserable fall victim to Moria-madness, seeing the city as it was in the days of old, not its present fallen state. A victim of Moria-madness may only be restored to reality with an ENHEARTEN roll from a companion (who must spend their main action to do so, if in combat). Otherwise, they wander blinded by glory for one hour.

Dreadful Spells. Spend 1 Hate to raise a Forgotten Dead and make all Player-heroes gain 2 Shadow points (Dread).

Dreadful Spells. When a Player-hero in sight spends Hope, spend 1 Hate to make the Player-hero gain 3 Shadow points (Sorcery). The WISDOM roll is Ill-favoured, and if the Player-hero fails it or is miserable, the Hope point is lost and all its effects cancelled.

Dreadful Spells: Lure of Shadow. (Adversary) weaves a web of darkness around their victim. Spend 1 Hate to make one Player-hero gain 3 Shadow points (Sorcery). Targets who both are Miserable and fail their Shadow test suffer a Bout of Madness.

Dreadful Spells: Misfortune. (Adversary) curses their foes with bad luck. Spend 1 Hate to make one Player-hero gain 3 Shadow points (Sorcery). Targets who fail their Shadow test or who are Miserable increase all their Attribute TNs by their Shadow score for the rest of the combat.

Dreadful Spells: Murder of Crows. Spend 1 Hate to make each Player-hero in sight gain 2 Shadow points (Sorcery) and lose (1d) on any attack rolls they make during their next turn. Those who fail their Shadow test or who are Miserable also suffer a severe Endurance loss (consider it as if from falling).

Dreadful Spells: Poison Concoction. Spend 1 Hate to throw poison onto one Player-hero, causing them to gain 3 Shadow points (Sorcery). Targets who fail their Shadow test or who are Miserable suffer a severe Endurance loss from poison.

Dreadful Spells: Slumber. Spend 1 Hate to make one Player-hero gain 3 Shadow points (Sorcery). Targets who fail their Shadow test or who are Miserable fall unconscious and may be roused only with a SONG roll. Otherwise, they wake up after one hour.

Dreadful Spells: Spells of Deception. Spend 1 Hate to make 1 Player-hero gain 3 Shadow points (Sorcery). Targets who fail their Shadow test or are Miserable experience visions that trick them into attacking their own companions. During their next turn, the Player-hero must choose an ally within range and spend their main action to make an attack roll against their own STRENGTH TN, modified only by the Parry modifier of the shield carried by the ally (if any). On a successful attack roll, any Success Icons must be spent to trigger a Heavy Blow, or a Pierce if the weapon allows it and this would produce a Piercing Blow.

Dreadful Spells: The Voice of Saruman. Once per round, spend 1 Hate to make all Player-heroes who can hear (Adversary) gain 4 Shadow points (Sorcery). The WISDOM roll is Ill-favoured. Those who fail their Shadow test or who are Miserable are enthralled and cannot attack (Adversary) for the rest of the fight, or until they suffer any Endurance loss. Those who fail their Shadow test and are Miserable suffer the same effects, and must spend their next main action to attack another Player-hero of the Lore master's choice (in any combat stance, including Rearward). Use the higher of the attacker's Strength TN and the target's Parry as the TN for the attack, and ignore any stance modifiers for this attack; the Lore master chooses the weapon used for the attack and how to spend any Success Icons. A successful AWE or PERSUADE roll from a Player-hero who is not enthralled (and who must spend their main action to do so) breaks the enchantment.

Dreadful Spells: The Will of Saruman. Once per round, spend 1 Hate to restore 1 Hate to all (Adversary)'s allies and make all Player-heroes in the fight gain 3 Shadow points (Sorcery). The WISDOM roll is Ill-favoured. Those who fail their Shadow test or who are Miserable are Weary for the rest of the fight. Those who fail their Shadow test and are Miserable suffer the same effects, and cannot Harden Will for the rest of the fight.

Dreadful Spells: Visions of Torment. Thanks to the Dark Lord's teachings, (Adversary) can induce terrible images of suffering in the minds of their victims, either when awake or asleep. Spend 1 Hate to make one Player-hero gain 3 Shadow points (Sorcery). If the target is unconscious, (Adversary) can cast this spell without spending Hate. Targets who fail their Shadow test or who are Miserable additionally lose a number of Endurance points equal to twice their current Shadow score. A Player-hero who is down to zero Endurance is also automatically Wounded.

Dreadful Wrath. On a successful attack roll, the targeted Player-hero gains 1 Shadow point (Dread), +1 Shadow point for each Success Icon on the attack roll. Those who fail their Shadow test are daunted and cannot spend Hope for the rest of the fight.

Drown. Spend 1 Resolve to make one Player-hero suffer a severe Endurance loss from suffocation.

Drums in the Deep. Instead of attacking, spend 1 Hate to increase the Eye Awareness of the Company by 3.

Dull-Witted. Player-heroes can attempt a special combat task against the creature while in Forward stance. The acting player makes a RIDDLE roll as the main action for the round: on a success, the Troll loses 1 point of Hate, plus 1 point for each Success Icon rolled.

Dwimmer-crafty. If (Adversary) is not surprised, opening volleys against them are not possible, they acts first during each round of combat, and all attack rolls against him are Ill-favoured.

Dwimmerlaik. The (Adversary) is immune to Endurance loss and Wounds from all sources of injury except fire and magical weapons, and can spend 1 Hate to cancel a Wound from such weapons (unless they have been wrought for the Bane of the Undead). When an attack inflicts damage to the (Adversary) that would cause it to go to zero Endurance, it causes a Piercing Blow instead. Then, if the (Adversary) is still alive, its Endurance score is set back at half its maximum rating.

Fear of Fire. The creature loses 1 Hate at the start of each round it is engaged in close combat with an adversary wielding a torch or other burning item.

Fearless. (Adversary)'s Might is considered 1 higher for the purpose of resisting the Intimidate Foe combat task.

Fell Presence. Spend 1 Hate when an opponent attempts a Combat Task to give that opponent a (-1d) penalty.

Fierce Folk. Spend 1 Resolve point to make an attack roll Favoured.

Fierce. Spend 1 Resolve point to gain (1d) on an attack and to make the roll Favoured.

Fireworks! Spend 1 Resolve to light and shoot Fireworks. Fireworks cause a Moderate Endurance loss from fire to all Player-heroes in Close Combat stance or Rearward stance (Lore master's choice), as per the rules on page 134 of The One Ring. Targets who lose at least 5 Endurance are also set on fire, suffering a Moderate Endurance loss at the end of each combat round, unless they put out the fire as their main action for the round.

Flame of Udûn. When a Player-hero hits the (Adversary) with a close combat attack, the Player-hero suffers severe Endurance loss from fire damage. The (Adversary) cannot use this ability when immersed in water.

Foul Dust. Spend 1 Hate to inflict a moderate Endurance loss from Poison to all Player-heroes in close combat stance.

Foul Reek. Spend 1 Hate to cause all combatants engaged with the (Adversary) in the Water to lose (1d) on all attacks for the round.

Foul Slime. Spend 1 Hate to cause all combatants engaged with the (Adversary) to lose (1d) on all rolls for the round.

Freeze the Blood. At the start of the first round of the battle all Player-heroes in sight of one or more (Adversaries) gain 2 Shadow points (Dread). Those who fail their Shadow test are dismayed and all their rolls are Ill-favoured for the rest of the fight.

Frost Breath. Spend 1 Resolve to make one Player-hero suffer a Severe Endurance loss from extreme cold.

Ghastly Wings. The creature can attack any Player-hero, in any combat stance, including Rearward.

Ghost Bird's Nest. While the (Adversary) is in the Hill of the Sleeper, all their rolls are Favoured and all attack rolls against it are Ill-favoured.

Ghost Bird's Speed. When targeted by an attack, spend 1 Resolve to make the attack roll lose (1d) and make it Ill-favoured.

Great Leap. Spend 1 Hate to attack any Player hero, in any combat stance, including Rearward.

Great Strength. If (Adversary) scores a Piercing Blow, spend 1 Resolve to make the target's Protection roll Ill-favoured.

Hate Sunlight. The creature loses 1 Hate for each round it is exposed to the full light of the sun.

Hatred (Subject). When fighting (Subject), all attacks are Favoured.

Heartless. The creature is not affected by the Intimidate Foe combat task, unless a Magical success is obtained.

Hideous Toughness. The creature is unaffected by unarmed attacks. Additionally, when an attack inflicts damage to the creature that would cause it to go to zero Endurance, it causes a Piercing Blow instead. Then, if the creature is still alive its Endurance score is set back at half its maximum rating.

Horrible Hands. Spend 1 Hate to make all Player-heroes in sight gain 2 Shadow points (Dread). Those who fail the Shadow test are daunted and cannot spend Hope for the rest of the fight.

Horrible Strength. If the creature scored a Piercing Blow with a close combat attack, spend 1 Hate to make the target's Protection roll Ill-favoured.

Invisible. This creature is invisible, and AWARENESS, SCAN, and attack rolls against it lose (2d), while the creature's attack rolls are Favoured and gain (1d) against Player-heroes who cannot see it. A Player-hero who obtains a Magical success on an AWARENESS or SCAN roll can see the creature normally and ignores all penalties for the rest of the fight.

Istar. Spend 1 Hate to cancel a Wound. When an attack inflicts damage to (Adversary) that would cause them to go to zero Endurance, it causes a Piercing Blow instead. Then, if (Adversary) is still alive, their Endurance score is set back at half its maximum rating.

Keening Wail. Spend 1 Hate to make all Player-heroes who can hear the creature gain 2 Shadow points (Dread). Those who fail their Shadow test are daunted and cannot spend Hope for the rest of the fight.

Lesser Ring of Power. Spend 1 Hate to cancel a success (not a Magical success) on any Skill roll made by a nearby Player-hero. The roll becomes a failure instead.

Lesser Ring. Spend 1 Resolve to either recover 6 Endurance or heal 1 Wound.

Lifeless. Spend 1 Resolve to cancel a Wound. When an attack inflicts damage to the creature that would cause it to go to zero Endurance, spend 1 Resolve to bring the creature back to full Endurance again.

Long Arms. Spend 1 Hate to attack any Player-hero, in any combat stance, including rearward.

Many Arms. The (Adversary) makes one additional attack each round. Each time it receives a Wound, however, for the rest of the fight the (Adversary) can make one less attack than those normally allowed (three attacks if Wounded once, two attacks if Wounded twice).

Master & Commander. While (Adversary) commands their crew, their and the crew's Might counts as 1 higher for the purpose of resisting the Intimidate Foe combat task.

Mighty Toughness. (Adversary) is unaffected by unarmed attacks. Additionally, when an attack inflicts damage to (Adversary) that would cause them to go to zero Endurance, it causes a Piercing Blow instead. Then, if (Adversary) is still alive their Endurance score is set back at half its maximum rating.

Mighty Toughness. When an attack inflicts damage to (Adversary) that would cause it to go to zero Endurance, it causes a Piercing Blow instead. Then, if the creature is still alive, its Endurance score is set back at half its maximum rating.

Mock. When a nearby Player-hero fails any roll, spend 1 Hate to make them gain 2 Shadow points (Sorcery).

Mother Knows Best. Spend 1 Hate to make a nearby Troll's attack Favoured.

Orc-poison. If an attack results in a Wound, the target is also poisoned.

Poison. If an attack results in a Wound, the target is also poisoned.

Savage Assault. Spend 1 Hate after a Fangs attack to immediately roll a Claws attack on the same target Shapeshift. (Adversary) can shapeshift into either a great snow- wolf or a young man.

Shapeshift. (Adversary) can shapeshift into any four-legged beast. They may also take the form of any known person or animal: an INSIGHT roll may be attempted by Player-heroes to tell the original from the copy. In any of the (Adversary)'s forms they displays an element of red — either their fur or hair or clothing.

Shelob Poisons. If an attack results in a Wound, the target immediately suffers a grievous Endurance loss from poison. If the poison reduces the target to zero Endurance, (Adversary) can choose that the target does not become Dying.

Snake-like Speed. When targeted by an attack, spend 1 Resolve to make the attack roll Ill-favoured.

Snap Blade. When a close combat weapon scores a Piercing Blow against the (Adversary), spend 1 Resolve to break that weapon. This ability does not affect weapons with one or more Rewards (enchanted or otherwise).

Spirit. Spend 1 Hate to cancel a Wound. When an attack inflicts damage to the creature that would cause it to go to zero Endurance, it causes a Piercing Blow instead. Then, if the creature is still alive, it returns to full Endurance. This ability is ineffective against Player-heroes wielding any magical weapon.

Strike Fear. Spend 1 Hate to make all Player-heroes in sight gain 2 Shadow points (Dread). Those who fail their Shadow test are daunted and cannot spend Hope for the rest of the fight.

Sudden Strike. (Adversary)'s attack rolls in the first round of any combat are Favoured.

Thick Armour. Spend 1 Hate to gain (2d) on a Protection roll.

Thing of Terror. At the start of the first round of the battle all Player-heroes in sight of one or more creatures with this ability gain 3 Shadow points (Dread). Those who fail their Shadow test are daunted and cannot spend Hope for the rest of the fight.

Turn to Stone. The Adversary turns to stone when exposed to sunlight.

Unnatural Hunger. When first encountered, the (Adversary) is sluggish and slow. If the (Adversary) eats a victim, it returns to full Endurance and Hate, heals any Wound it has and becomes faster and stronger, using the higher Hate, Bite and Claw scores in brackets and gaining the Fell Ability Fierce.

Wavering. Player-heroes can attempt a special combat task against Noredhel while in Defensive stance. The acting player makes a PERSUADE roll as the main action for the round: on a success, (Adversary) loses 1 point of Resolve, plus 1 point for each Success icon rolled.

Weak Spot. Player-heroes may attempt a special combat task against the creature while in any stance. The acting player makes a LORE or SCAN roll as the main action for the round: on a success, (Adversary) loses (1d) on the next Protection roll, plus another (1d) for each Success icon rolled Wind-like Speed. When targeted by an attack, spend 1 Resolve to make the attack roll Ill-favoured.

Wooden Stilts. The (Adversary) may attack any Player-hero, in any combat stance, including Rearward, and may escape from combat on their turn without making any roll. The (Adversary) is stripped of this Fell Ability if wounded twice or reduced to zero Endurance: in either case, cancel the Wound, return the Ghost Bird to full Endurance, and delete this Fell Ability.

Yell of Alarm. Spend 1 Hate to raise the Eye Awareness of the Company by 1. If the total Eye Awareness is equal to or greater than the Hunt Threshold, there is an immediate Revelation episode.

Yell of Triumph. Spend 1 Resolve to restore 1 Resolve to all other (Adversary) in the fight.

FOES AND FELLOWS OF THE VALLEY OF THE DWAVES

CLEARWEATHER MARKET

Clearweather Market is the trading hub between the Dwarves of the Blue Mountains and the rest of Eriador. The town's mix of dwarves and humans are hardworking folk and intend to fend off any threat to their livelihood from outsiders.

Captain Roe

For twenty-three years he has kept the peace between the burghers and the guildsmen. Now, with all the chaos that surrounds Clearweather, stability is all that matters.

ELVES AND DWARVES OF THE BLUE MOUNTAINS

Dwarven caravans crisscross the small mines that range throughout the lands of Copperhall and the Hall of the Longbeards. Those caravans are moved by hardworking dwarven caravan gaurds. Occasionally, Elf Wardens track foul creatures into the lands bordering their fortified homes in Lindon. Those not aligned with the Enemy should not fear either elf or dwarve, but they should not oppose their activities either. In places where tombs lie, one would be wise to leave the dead be.

Deathless. Spend 1 Hate to cancel a Wound. When an attack inflicts damage to the creature that would cause it to go to zero Endurance, spend 1 Hate to bring the creatures back to full Endurance instead. This ability is ineffective against Player-heroes wielding a magical weapon enchanted with spells for the Bane of the Undead.

Snap Blade. When a close combat weapon scores a Piercing Blow against the Forlorn, spend 1 Hate to break that weapon. This ability does not affect weapons with one or more Rewards (enchanted or otherwise).

Fear of Fire. The creature loses 1 Hate at the start of each round it is engaged in close combat with an adversary wielding a torch or other burning item.

BLUE MOUNTAIN GAURHOTH

Sauron mastered calling upon fell spirits to inhabit wolves within Tol-in-Gaurhoth. When their isle sank beneath the waves, these gaurhoth lurked in the Blue Mountains for the Dark Lord to call them forth once again. With ages passed since the first gaur was formed, the Dark Lord grants them the power to walk among the free folk as their neighbors in a fair form or to terrorize the nights in their foul form.

Dom Sadron

A werewolf of ancient power arisen once again, Sadron seeks to sow chaos throughout the Blue Mountains to distract the dwarves from the growing darkness in the West. Though, growing his pack is not his only goal. He also seeks others who have long served the Dark Lord, but need to be awakened.

ORCS OF THE BLUE MOUNTAINS

Surrounded by the kingdom of Lindon, no great orc chieftan claims rule over these valleys. Their ability to be unnoticed is the trait that has kept them alive, and feeding on the carvans of the ailing dwarven realms. The Dark Lord has imbued a few, privileged orcs to be Shadow-Speakers. FELL ABILITIES:

Hideous Toughness. The creature is unaffected by unarmed attacks. Additionally, when an attack inflicts damage to the creature that would cause it to go to zero Endurance, it causes a Piercing Blow instead. Then, if the creature is still alive its Endurance score is set back at half its maximum rating.

Dull-Witted. Player-heroes can attempt a special combat task against the creature while in Forward stance. The acting player makes a RIDDLE roll as the main action for the round: on a success, the Troll loses 1 point of Hate, plus 1 point for each Success Icon rolled.

Fear of Fire. The creature loses 1 Hate at the start of each round it is engaged in close combat with an adversary wielding a torch or other burning item.

Turn to Stone. Turns to stone when exposed to sunlight.

COMBAT PROFICIENCIES: Staff 3 (4/14)

FELL ABILITIES:

Hate Sunlight. Lose 1 Hate for each round exposed to the full light of the sun.

Hatred of Dwarves. All attacks are Favoured when fighting dwarves.

Combat Sorcerer. (Adversary) can cast their Dreadful Spells in place of their attack. If they do so, they can cast the spell without expending Hate Dreadful Spells: Calls forth the Shadows. Bend shadows to cover the area. Hate Sunlight is negated for the rest of the combat encounter for all orcs.

Dreadful Spells: Lure of Shadow. Weave a web of darkness around a victim. Spend 1 Hate to make one Player-hero gain 3 Shadow points (Sorcery). Targets who both are Miserable and fail their Shadow test suffer a Bout of Madness.
