

THE MOUND OF DUMNOVAL

A THE ONE RING RPG STARTER-FRIENDLY ADVENTURE

2965 Third Age, 'the watchful peace'... A traveller supposedly can travel safely from Tharbad to Bree. Yet each year in Woldsend it seems the winters get a little harsher and the shadows a little longer.

Falco Took saw refugees on the Greenway just now. Refugees! And what about all those disappearances...? Just last week it was old Hob Bolger's daughter's turn. Is no one safe then?

Woldsend is a small hamlet, a cluster of a few farms inhabited by sturdy hobbits. The problems all begin with the disappearance of a cousin twice-removed of the respected Hob Bolger, Merimmas. And only 4 days ago, Hob's daughter Camillia did not return from a visit to the hall after dark. Afraid of those disappearances, the hobbits now stay in after dark. No more late-night food, joy and merriment!

From behind their small windows, they can see lights in the distance, near the river bank behind the forest. To make matters worse, the number of lights grows every night. Hob, ever the man (or hobbit) to take matters in his own hands (he's the one who started building a palisade around the village, while his friends stood idle by), mounted one of Falco Took's poor ponies. He went in search of rangers at Sarn Ford, a half-day ride from Woldsend, to help the village find out what is going on. Alas, he did not find any of them there and so in a forced march Hob, mounted on the scrawny pony, set off for the Greenway to look for help.

A curious hobbit from Woldsend named Ceredic Southfoot went walking his dogs after a winter storm. He left the oak forest that curls around Woldsend like a half moon and made for the open space and the old hill near the river Baranduin. He discovered the hill now showed a gaping black entrance, the bush that grew there dislodged by the storm wind. The dogs snarled and whined at the entrance, but curiosity won and Ceredic entered the tomb. Inside the hill he found the corpse of an old man, but also a beautiful ring, a signet ring with three crossed arrows on it. He carefully put the ring in his chest pocket and returned to the village without telling a word of his discovery. A few days later he returned to the hill. He sneaked out after dark and made his way stealthily through the dark forest. Suddenly he stopped at the edge of the wood. What he saw then made him decide never to go near the hill again and keep his secret quiet.

The signet ring belonged to the old man, a Chieftain from Dunland named Dumnoval and a legend for the Dunlendings. Awakened by the disturbance of peace, Dumnoval arises each night to lure Dunlendings who gather to his sweet singing, an almost angelic voice they can follow for miles - but others apparently don't hear. For nights now they gather to listen to Dumnoval's lore, who appears at night as a young warrior in full armour. For now, the Dunlending don't cause significant trouble in the area, but they appear in full battle dress in front of their dead Chieftain nonetheless. Some Dunland pilgrims are seen travelling from Tharbad to the South Farthing. It's the torchlights of the gathering the hobbits can see from behind their window, but they dare not go looking.

To propitiate the spirit, the Dunlending offer him trifles. And sometimes an innocent, curious hobbit who gets too close or who is out late. Hobbits (and other sacrifices like animals) are put to sleep by Dumnoval's touch. Dunlending are opportunists and being in a strange country they are wary of more armed prey. It's highly unlikely they would try to offer an armed ranger, say.

Just before dawn, the spirit disappears back into its burial mound and the Dunlending scatter to forage, except for a few fearsome guards near the tomb and some scouts in the wood.

The players must find the tomb. Attacking the ghost at night is near impossible, as Dumnoval is at the peak of his power and is surrounded by Dunlendings, armed to the teeth.

During the day, the ghost is far less powerful and looks like an old, sleeping, man. He can be disabled (but not be killed) once his guards are slain. The 2 hobbits, who are in a deep sleep inside the tomb, are freed. The hobbits awake from their sleep once the grave robber Ceredic returns the ring and the ring is placed in the tomb again.

PART ONE: THE ROAD TO WOLDSEND

An exhausted Hob reaches the players. Perhaps Hob comes struggling out from the bushes on the Greenway or they meet him in Bree on his way to the Angle where he hopes to find rangers.

HOB BOLGER

DISTINCTIVE FEATURES: Busybody, hardy

Hob has already started building a palisade, though he's the only one in the village who predicted trouble. Now his daughter has gone missing. Hob mounted a pony from Falco and set out to find some help near Sarn Ford, where he knows rangers are skulking. He didn't find them there, so in a half panic he set out to the Angle.

He tells them his cousin twice-removed Merimmas and - more importantly, his daughter Camillia, have disappeared. Lights also gather near the village at night and the village cannot defend itself.

The players travel to the village, following Hob. Their destination is the south border of the South Farthing where a tiny cluster of farmsteads is called Woldsend.

On the Greenway the players can SCAN for a tip to the Cache at Sarn Ford (See Sarn Ford):

- ◆ If they fail the roll they find an arrow marked on the stone, they could follow to Sarn Ford. Something is there, as it's a hidden arrow but the players don't know what.
- ◆ On a success they find a rune mark that they can read as a sign to the cache at Sarn Ford.

When the players have crossed Sarn Ford, a couple of hours later a sudden thick fog has appeared out of the valley of the Baranduin. Out of the fog, 2 very large hunting dogs appear and growl and snarl at the players as their muscles tense up.

Give the players some time to decide what they will do.

Before any harm is done, a hobbit appears, out of breath. “There you are!” he calls. But, who goes there!?” He asks, a little frightened, once his eye catches the players. His face softens a little once he recognizes Hob and he lets out a sigh of relief. “Finally back old Bolger? Is this the help you spoke off?”

If there is a ranger amongst the company, he gets a stink eye from the hobbit. Though the whole village knows about the presence of the rangers at Sarn Ford, their true intention is unknown to the hobbits and they really don't trust the strange long men.

"I was beginning to think you would return with one of those dirty black-headed hillmen. You know Falco saw a bunch of those only yesterday?" This is how the players meet Ceredic Southfoot.

Exchanging strange news and discussing the latest events, the company travels a little further (about a half day's walk) to the village.

part two: the hamlet of wolfsend

WOLDSSEND

Woldsend is a tiny hamlet of about 6 farmsteads, barns and 1 hall where a few hobbit families (Bolgers, Tookes and Southfoot) live by growing pumpkin and turnips. They supplement their diet by hunting rabbits, fish from the river and nuts and blackberries from the forest. A few skinny ponies, property of Falco Took, assist the hobbits in gathering firewood.

Woldsend is on the southernmost edge of the South Farthing, the outskirts of the civilized Shire. Still, the hobbits there are proud and hardy, and they take special care to keep their village well-tended, with swept alleys and small, flowery front gardens.

A disquieted Hob Bolger has begun building a palisade around the hamlet, but it is still incomplete.

The village, is a day and a half march from the Greenway to the east and half a day's march from Sarn Ford, the crossing of the Baranduin. The rangers who guard the river crossing are well known in the village, but they are seen as strange, dirty folk. All rangers though know that their people guard Sarn Ford.

The village has 1 access road in the south from on the Greenway, and overlooks a wooded slope to the east, beyond which marshy land and rough rocks lead to the banks of the Baranduin (The Brandywine).

WOLDSSEND

- 1 The unfinished palisade
- 2 The central hall
- 3 Hob & Salvia's house
- 4 Merimmas' hobbit hole
- 5 Falco's house, the only two-story house
- 6 Ceredic's House
- 7 Houses, barns and storages from 3 other families.
(For the LM to expand, if need to)
- 8 A meadow for the ponies of Falco Took
- 9 A few scrawny fields with pumpkins and turnips. At the moment, just after winter, the fields are rather empty and soaked.
- 10 The road leading from to the town back to the junction, Sarn Ford to the South-East and Longbottom to the North-West
- 11 The forest, curled like a half moon around the eastern part of the village
- 12 Behind the forest is a clearing with a mound, stones and swamps that lead to the Baranduin.

Upon arriving, the players receive only a cold reception in the village. Hob suggests getting their strength up and gives them options of eating at the Hall or invites them at home with his wife.

The players can:

- ◆ Gather info in the village or in the hall (see Assemble or Interrogate)
- ◆ Visit Salvia & Hob's house (who wants to eat first - See Salvia Bolger and Book Reading)
- ◆ Leave directly towards the lights near the river, dragging the exhausted Hob with them.
- ◆ Or anything else the players propose...

SALVIA BOLGER

Salvia is a burly hobbit who likes to spend winters weaving and talking with the other hobbit women of Woldsend. Together with Hob, they have one young, impulsive daughter: Camellia. Their cottage is cared for but they eat from chipped porcelain plates and a battered kettle whistles on the old, ramshackle wood-burning stove. Their house is the only one that has a couple of books lying around. They are the most welcoming of the hobbits in the village and Salvia enjoys telling visitors about the area and show them around.

If the players ask Salvia directly about the burial mound, Salvia can tell them all there is to know (see 6 successes on Searching Books) - unless she is forgetful, LM's call.

THE MERCHANT FALCO TOOK

He has spotted Dunlendings along the roads. They wear rough coats, most wear dented helmets - sometimes decorated with dirty plumes or small antlers. Their hair is dark and their beards long. Around their arms they proudly wear their arm rings; on their arms, bustling, blue tattoos stand out. The hobbits do not like them to show up, but they aren't causing any real problems for the moment, says Falco.

CEREDIC SOUTHFOOT

Ceredic has 2 large hunting dogs with which he hunts rabbits in the forest. He has 'seen nothing' and 'knows nothing' - obviously (His ring is not on his hand but in his breast pocket). Good day!

ASSEMBLE OR INTERROGATE

- ◆ Players can convene a meeting in the hall, but the hobbits are sceptical of strangers and will loitre or simply not show up. If the players can come up with some kind of request, the LM can decide on a Council.
The attitude of the hobbits is Reluctant during the council.

* Council: P104

- ◆ They can also go door-to-door and then need successful PERSUADE, ENHEARTEN, LORE or RIDDLE rolls.
Hob can be of assistance to persuade the villagers.

SEARCHING BOOKS

Players can also read the books in Hob & Salvia's house.

Skill Endeavour: The players need 6 successes on 5 rolls:

- ◆ On a fail: The players learn about Sarn Ford and the rumour rangers store weapons there.
- ◆ All 6 Successes: All the above. In a second book they learn about The Chieftain Dumnoval, but nothing about his death or grave.
- ◆ More than 6 Successes: All the above, In a third book they discover the Old Lore.

*Skill Edeavour: P132

OLD LORE

It is said that the Dunlendings, in their tumultuous history, only have once known a Chieftain who could rally all the hill tribes of Dunland behind him. Dumnoval was the name of that young and ambitious warrior, blessed with a beautiful voice - a rare thing among the raucous guttural sounds of the Dunlendings. His symbol, 3 crossed arrows, represented his drive for expansion: Lands for the Dunlendings to the North, the West and the South. But when Dumnoval drowned in the Baranduin on campaign, his army buried him nearby, afraid to rob the goddess of water of her victim. Dumnoval's grave was forgotten; the man became a legend. Never again did the Dunlendings manage to push so deep into Eriador. With the loss of their young leader, the tribes also lost their ambition.

SARN FORD

If players feel they need to be better equipped, there is a cache near Sarn Ford that the rangers maintain and provide dried meat, drinking water and, most importantly, weapons. Sarn Ford is a half-day march from the hamlet.

A successful SCAN roll along the Greenway makes the players find a rune that points them to the cache (If one of the players is a ranger, that player knows about the rune). The books at the Bolger's house can also point to the cache.

The players lose a whole day when visiting the Cache, so upon returning to the village, it is likely dark and Falco's pony has just been stolen. Falco waits fearfully in the doorway until the players return. The pony can also be found in the burial mound later on, just like the missing hobbits.

THE CACHE

1 Long Bow for each player: (4/16) 4 Load

2x Shield: +2 Parry, 4 Load

1 x Long Sword

Upon a SCAN or HUNTING roll, the players find full fish traps.

These can satisfy the hobbits and convince them to cooperate.

WHY AREN'T THERE RANGERS NEAR SARN FORD?

Hob first went looking for help near Sarn Ford, but didn't find anyone there. The ranger tasked with watching the ford tried to stop a group of aggressive Dunlendings. The Dunlendings attacked him and overpowered him. Wounded and bound, they took him away, but he managed to escape. You can meet him somewhere between Sarn Ford and Woldsend, where he asks players to help him tend to his wounds. If players spend some time with him and make a successful LORE roll, the ranger can tell them the Old Lore about Dumnoval.

THE CLEARING

- 1 The Mound of Dumnoval
- 2 Open terrain that slopes down towards the river
- 3 The Baranduin
- 4 The forest, leads back to Woldsend

The players have the choice:

- ◆ Gather the hobbits in the Hall for a meeting. If the players reveal the intention of going to look for the lights, the hobbits strongly agree and make all sorts of promises. After which the hobbits ask the players to wait for a bit while they collect their things. Then the hobbits leave unannounced to have a hearty meal. Have the players wait and see how long before they realize the hobbits aren't coming. By that time, it's fully dark.
- ◆ If the players interrogate the hobbits, it's dark by the time they are done. If they convince hobbits to join them while they go looking for the lights, only a few will show up, armed with torches and pitchforks. However, the hobbits will wait frightened at the edge of the forest.
- ◆ If the players decide to go looking for the lights only the next day or later, for example because they visited Sarn Ford, something else disappeared. A pony from Falco, or one of the big dogs the players met from Ceredic.

If the players go visit the forest and mound for the first time during daylight, they quickly run into Dunland warriors who are foraging in the forest.

DUNLAND WARRIOR

If the players manage to question a warrior, he tells them that they have come to honour the great warrior prince Dumnoval, who rises at night and sings to them about the Dunlendings' ambition.

It's possible the players have not yet seen the ceremony (See The Ceremony) but enter the tomb and slay Dumnoval during the day. Continue Entering the Tomb, the Treasure and Ceredic's Confession. But when the players return with the ring, the Dunlendings mount an attack at the hamlet because their king doesn't sing to them anymore. Brace for heavy weather!

DUMNOVAL'S MOUND

The mound lies on an open plain, behind the forest that separates the river bank from Woldsend. There is 1 stone entrance, a rough rectangle, behind which the deep black yawns. See: Entering the Tomb and Treasure.

part three: the mound at night

THE CEREMONY

At night, the Dunlendings gather with torches, make pyres and place sentries in the valley behind the forest. The ancient, low mound is the centre around which they gather.

The players can choose:

- ◆ To keep watching: they see the main part of the ceremony but are discovered by a party of Dunlendings who attack the players.
- ◆ To overpower one of the sentries:

DUNLAND SENTRY

If the players manage to question the sentry, he tells them they have come to honour the great warrior king Dumnoval, who rises at night and sings to them about the Dunlendings great ambition.

- ◆ To attack the gathering head-on. If the players attack the horde head-on, they fight the Dunland Warriors and are vastly outnumbered. Once the players take some endurance loss, they are captured.

* Loss of Endurance: P98,

* Wounds: P101

While the players were fighting, Dumnoval has risen from his tomb. The players don't hear the sound but the Dunlendings are entranced, listening to the sweet sound of Dumnoval's voice. Seeing the fight at the edge of the clearing, his voice commands the warriors to bring one of the intruders before him. The spirit will challenge that player to a duel with his sword, seeking to prove his prowess in front of his kinmen. The other players too are brought to the center of the gathering. Dumnoval is surrounded by his most fierce warriors.

Once the dueling player takes a significant amount of damage, all players are knocked unconscious and are left nearby.

If the fight should go badly for Dumnoval, the leader breaks off the fight by calling two warriors who come rushing in. The young Dumnoval takes a step back and has to catch his breath, but oddly doesn't seem to have a scratch on him.

MEETING DUMNOVAL AT NIGHT

The young Dumnoval is dressed in a deep red cloak and a fur-lined cape. He wears several jewels: a gold torque around his neck, several arm rings and a brooch. His hair is long and unusually straight for a Dunlending. His beard is short and groomed, giving him a rather soft, boyish look. Because his kinsmen look far more menacing, it is easy to underestimate his martial technique. However, he is a lithe and nimble warrior. He carries an arrogant, confident air and a condescending sneer constantly on his face.

"DUMNOVAL'S MARCH"

A Dunlendish Song:

*"All you valiant men, arise,
The king has made his call.
Take the torch and bring your sword,
We ride to watch them fall.*

*Burn their fields and take their gold,
To far-off lands we march today,
King Dumnoval leads the way*

*Through the valleys, over hills,
Our banners bright shall fly.
Strike them down and take their wealth,
Leave no one to weep or cry.*

Burn their fields and take their gold,

translated from Dunlendish with respect to rhyme and rythm"

PART FOUR: THE MOUND BY DAY

If the players go to the mound on a second visit during the daylight, they discover that during the day the horde is gone off foraging and that only Dunland sentries are guarding the tomb. When entering the tomb they wake Dumnoval who will fight them as an old man. (See The Mound by Day)

ENTERING THE TOMB

Entering the deep dark behind the entrance takes courage. Each player entering the tomb must make a successful VALOUR roll. On a failure, the hero gets 2 Shadow points.

*Shadow Gain: P137

* Eye Awareness: P169, but not recommended for a one-shot starter adventure

The entrance leads to a central chamber where an old man lies in an open stone sarcophagus.

MEETING DUMNOVAL AT DAY

The old Dumnoval is shrouded in worn-out white rags. His long white hair reaches to his waist in thin strands. His face is sunken in, the eye sockets deep in the skull. He lies down, his hands folded on his chest cupped around his sword. When the players see him, he blinks his eyes in confusion, woken by the sudden disruption of his peace. With great pains, he gets up and begins to screech and strike uncontrollably and wild with the rusty, battered sword. This seems to take a lot of effort on his part, as if the old sword is far too heavy for his decaying muscles.

Defeating Dumnoval should not take much effort from the players. Once defeated, the players can search the tomb. Next to him stands a shield bearing the symbol of the 3 arrows and a closed book (his merits, written in Dunlandish). 4 small side niches open onto the central room. In one room Merimmas sleeps, in another Camellia, Hob Bolger's daughter.

INSIDE THE MOUND

They are unharmed but in a deep sleep. (Unless time is short, skip this and move to the end of the story and have the hobbits awaken). The hobbits do not wake up yet. Upon seeing the shield, Hob recognized the symbol and remembers a talk he had with Ceredic, who showed off his new ring, which had the same symbol!

TREASURE

The other rooms are empty, apart from a small treasure for the players, stored in stone jars. Roll 2d6 value per player, roll feat die 4x.

* Treasure: P158

Remember, on a Gandalf Rune or Eye, roll on page 159.

Magic treasure found on an Eye leads to Shadow points!

THE TORQUE OF DUMNOVAL

Among the treasure, players find a torque. Ask explicitly who will carry the treasure, or who wants the torque.

The player who carries the torque is kept awake the following nights by a faint singing and he gets the urge to sing the tune. Have that player take a SONG test. On a Success, the player sings himself to sleep and he takes 1 Fatigue point and takes no Prolonged Rest. On a failure, the player only manages to bring forth a hoarse moan the whole night and keeps all the other players - and part of the village - awake. The player takes 2 Fatigue points and no Prolonged Rest; the other players all take 1 Fatigue point.

It is up to the LM to decide how many nights the torque causes this disturbance. One solution is not to wear the torque; but the wearer must explicitly state this.

* Reducing Fatigue P111 : one per Prolonged Rest:

* Prolonged Rest: P71, once per day - a night's sleep

FINALE

CEREDIC'S CONFESSION

When they return to the village, Salvia is already waiting for them. The latter kicks the grave robber Ceredic towards them. Ceredic anxiously confesses that he took the ring from the grave.

- ◆ If time is very short, Salvia and the grave robber are already on their way towards the tomb and are actively searching for the players.

GRAVE ROBBER CEREDIC SOUTHFOOT

Ceredic confesses he took the ring from the grave but he dared not bring it back. And he did like it. One day he went walking his dogs after a winter storm. He left the oak forest that curls around Woldsend like a half moon and made for the open space and the old hill near the river Baranduin. He discovered the hill now showed a gaping black entrance, the bush that grew there dislodged by the storm wind. The dogs snarled and whined at the entrance, but curiosity won and he entered the tomb. That's how he found the ring.

ACCEPTING THE RING

The ring does possess some seductive power to non-hobbit players. Ceredic takes the ring slowly from his pocket but does not offer it explicitly to the players. Before he can do so, have the players make a VALOUR roll. The first one to fails, grabs the ring aggressively from Ceredic's hand. Have the players discuss this sudden outburst of violence. That player takes 1 Shadow Point for his Greed. If all players succeed they behave friendly to Ceredic and the following PERSUADE is an auto-success:

If the players PERSUADE him, he can tell more:

- ◆ He tells them he went inside during the day and found the corpse of an old man wrapped in a white cloth.
- ◆ A few days later he returned to the hill after dark. He saw the young warrior Dumnoval arise. With his heart racing, he sprinted back to the village and decided never to go back and tell nobody about his discovery. He used to keep the ring inside his breast pocket and when he showed it to his friends, he told them it was an heirloom of his grand-father.

The players can bring back the ring, but keep in mind whether they already met Dumnoval during the night or have slain him. If he's slain, they bring the ring back without resistance and the hobbits in the tomb awaken. If he's not already slain, they will fight either the young warrior (if they bring the ring during the night, see the Ceremony) or the old man (if they bring the ring during the day, see The Tomb during the Day).

When the hobbits wake up, they are brought back to the village sleepy and confused.

If Hob is with the players, he only has eyes for his daughter and though she doesn't give him straight answers, he continues questioning her, both stern and concerned.

MERIMMAS TOOK

A distant cousin of both Falco and Hob. Merimmas went to watch the torches in the evening. When he came near, the Dunlendings knocked him unconscious, and Dumnoval took him to his grave as his squire in his resting place.

The heroes are welcomed into the hall by the hobbits and they are provided with pumpkin and turnip pie, nuts and blackberries, ale and a good rest. Falco, ever the merchant, lets them choose one of his sad ponies as thanks.

After these events, the hobbits see the number of torches diminish every night thereafter until eventually the dunlendings do not return.

If Ceredic still has the ring, he realizes how all the misery started with it. Afraid to put the ring back in the grave, he throws it into the Baranduin...

THE SINGING TORQUE

If the players wonder about the Torque and play a Fellowship Phase: their Patron can tell them, if a player wears the torque (choose the 'Write a Song' undertaking), the torque will sing the 'Dumnoval Song' (BATTLE Song) to them, and the torque will grant them a +1 on future SONG rolls. Now the torque is settled with his new owner and doesn't keep him up at night any longer.

Once the players take some endurance loss, they are captured and bound and will see the ceremony of Dumnoval rising at night.

They will see Dumnoval singing and the Dunledings go into some kind of trance, but this will not hear the voice from Dumnoval. After the ceremony they are left unconscious nearby.
